Institute of Contemporary London

Case Study

Client

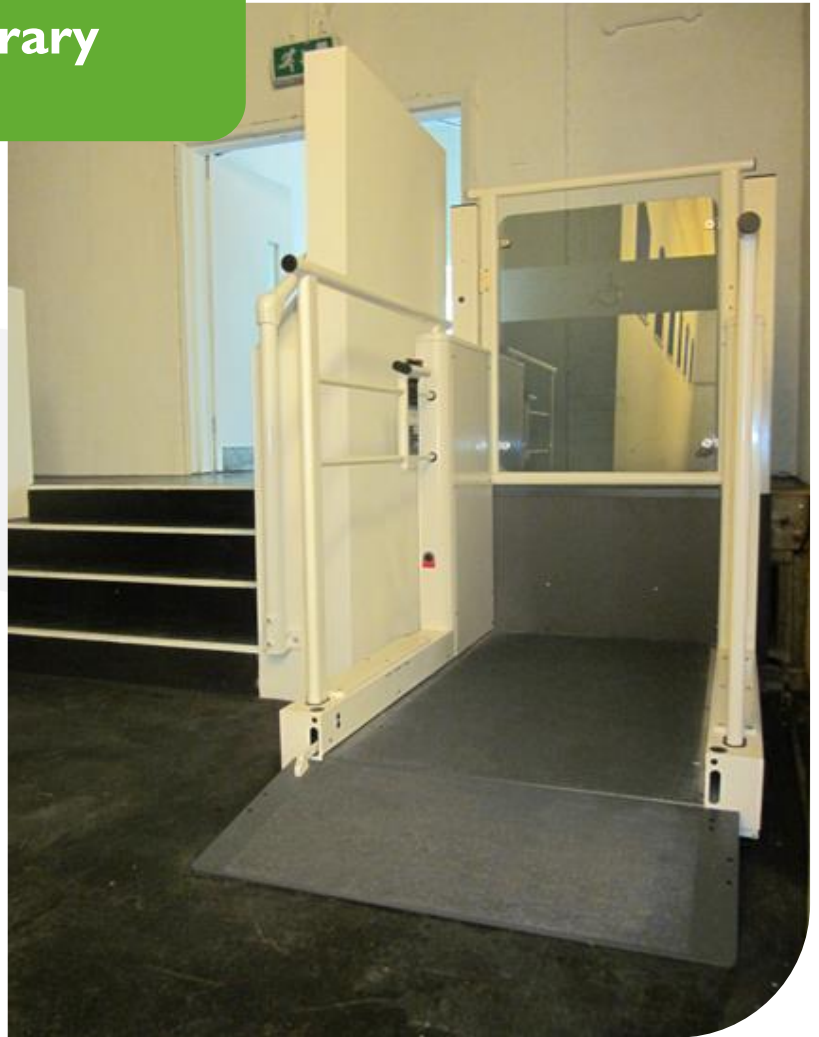

The Institute of Contemporary Arts (ICA) was established by a group of radical artists in the 1940's. It exists to challenge the foundations of contemporary art and continues to be at the foreground of interdisciplinary art practice in the UK. With a prestigious location on The Mall in central London, the Institute's regency building designed by John Nash houses galleries, theatres, cinemas, reading rooms and a café bar.

Problem

With a ground-breaking exhibition imminent, Mr Trevor Hall, Gallery Manager, had a very tight timeframe in which to modify a theatre to incorporate exhibition space; a mere 16 days from start to finish! Early on, he had identified an opportunity as part of this project to replace a long, 'ugly' access ramp with a more aesthetically pleasing option. Critical factors in choosing the right platform lift supplier for this work were: the ability to deliver to an exacting timeframe, to create the perfect looking solution, and high levels of customer service.

Solution

Evolifts manufactured and installed an EVO300 Step Lift for ICA. A high quality access solution which didn't stand out and detract from the exhibition surrounding it was fundamental. Hence, ICA specified a white powder coated finish and a glass upper gate to ensure the lift looked light, bright and discrete. With around 3,500 visitors to the exhibition each week, the fact that no-one has commented on their new platform lift signals success!

Testimonial

As Trevor Hall explains "We are delighted with the way our new lift has fitted into the theatre without having a huge footprint or looking obvious and heavy. However, also important for me in this project was working with a trusted partner. I had no flexibility with my build timeline so I had to be absolutely sure that I was dealing with an organisation I could be sure would deliver accurately and on time. I found Evo Lifts obliging and professional to deal with and the whole project was a positive experience. I was particularly impressed that the Managing Director paid an unprompted visit post-installation to check everything was OK. I would recommend them in a shot."
